SOCIETY

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hensel, 414 Wood st., was the scene of a pretty wedding when their daughter Irene, became the bride of Benjamin Harbaugh. The ceremony was performed Saturday evening at 9 o'clock by Rev. W. H. Freshley, pastor of the First Evangelical church, in the presence of a number of relatives and friends. The bride was attended by her sister Miss Edna Hensel as maid of honor and the groom was attended by Enoch Johnson. The wedding march was played by Miss Inas Wolford. Following the ceremony dinner was served to those present. The bride and groom will be at home to their friends at 1013 S. Franklin st.

Mr. and Mrs. George Newton, Center township, gave a dinner Sunday complimentary to their son, Terence, whose marriage to Miss Bernice Taylor of this city, took place Tuesday afternoon at the home of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Taylor, 1007 St. Alexis st. Those present from away were Mr. and Mrs. C. Whitmore and Mr. Khet of Elkhardt, and Mr. and Mrs. F. Frank of South Bend. Mr. and Mrs. Newton will be at home after Sept. 26 at their home on the Denlow rd.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Gibson and family, Mr. and Mrs. James Doolan, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Braunsdorf and family of South Bend, and George Gibson and Parker Gibson of Chicago were among the out-of-town guests who enjoyed the dinner given Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Yates in Argos, in honor of their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Yates, who were married last week. Covers were placed for 40 guests.

For Dress or Common Wear

By La Raconteuse.

Suitable either for a brisk morning shopping tour or for a dressy afternoon affair is this hat of black velvet, with its wide brim, drooping a bit at one side. At the front are groups of black and white shaven quills with odd little specks of feathers at the ends. These quills are laid in opposite directions and are held in place by a thin, flat bow of black grosgrain ribbon. The crown is of black velvet, softly draped.

A wheel belonging to Stanislaus Trembaczewski, 433 S. Jackson st., popular colors, and in light weights to be used for afternoon frocks. There is a revival of silk grenadines, the popular material which formed years ago the best gown for particular women. It is shown in a variety of shades of different widths, with tapestry flowers, silk polka dots and plaids.
In speaking of silks one must not overlook those embroidered in tinsel and silk, for they are likely to be very much worn as a whole or part of evening gowns and wraps this winter. The designs are very beautiful in fruit and floral motifs. Black and white silk, with gold or silver medallions, is particularly attractive.

How to Care For Your Eyes

No Woman Is Beautiful if Eyes Show Strain or Weariness.

By Audrey Munson.

No woman can maintain her claim to beauty if her eyes show little red, threadlike lines of strain; nor if there are lines of weariness about them, nor shadows of illness or exhaustion beneath them.

Eyes should be clear and bright, capable of expressing vivacity or serenity, according to the soul weather which they reflect. Personally, I prefer the steady, serene gaze that suggests the paintings we have seen of the Madonna. But the brightly roving eye has its attractions, too—more for some than for others. Eyes, like types of beauty, appeal to the taste of the beholder.

I am most careful to adjust a book, magazine or newspaper at the easiest angle for reading. I do not drop my book in my lap and lean over it until my eyes accommodate themselves to the distance of the book. Not at all. Eyes were made before books and are more valuable. Therefore, when I settle to read I hold the book at various distances until it is just so far from my eyes or near to them that I can read without the slightest sense of strain.

Resting The Eyes.
When I have read for a little time, even though my eyes are not tired, I glance out of the window at the farthest roof, or up at the sky and fix my sight upon the highest cloud. I stare at these objects for two or three or five minutes. Then my eyes go back to the printed page rested. When I am sewing or posing or writing letters, or embroidering, I give my eyes these rests a dozen times a day. Sometimes oftener.

The moment my eyes are weary I stop whatever I am doing and rest them, either in the way I have described, or by closing them for a few minutes. I learned the last habit of eye repose from a literary friend of mine who writes many hours every day. She calls these rests "naps."

Never Reads Reclining.
I am even now buying a book rest, for I think it is even easier to adjust a book to our height than to our eyes. A book rest you can raise higher than the level of your lap and the hands and wrists will not be wearied by the strain of holding it higher than our knees.

I never, never, never read in bed. I am thankful to those, older and wiser than I, who taught me that to read while reclining in bed or on a couch was to overfill the blood vessels of the eye and so cause a degree of congestion in the eye. If one is too tired to sit straight I am convinced she is too tired to read. She should rest in the silence and darkness of her room. I am quite aware how common is this bad habit, and I haven't a doubt that this is one reason why New Yorkers have the least beautiful eyes in the United States. They live so largely by artificial light and most of them do all the reading they do in bed.

RIVER PARK

C. L. Clark, 947 S. Tenth st., wandered away from his home Saturday morning about 1 o'clock. When last seen he was walking west on Lincoln highway near Springbrook park. William Tekker, a truck farmer, a former resident of River Park, was driving in the same direction and asked him to ride with him. Mr. Clark has been ill for the past two years, and his mind is unbalanced. He has wandered away several times but has been found by friends and returned to his home. He is 73 years old, six feet tall, but is considerably stooped when he walks. When he left home he wore a slouch hat, light coat, blue serge pants and shoes that were not mates, one of light weight and the other heavy. Rev. W. H. Appleby, superintendent of the South Bend district, will be present and preside at the last quarterly meeting to be held Tuesday evening at the Methodist Episcopal church. Reports of the various organizations of the church will be read, officers will be elected and plans for next year's work will be made. All members of the church are invited to attend.
Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Powell of Constantine, Mich., have been visiting their daughter, Mrs. J. L. Morse, 94 S. Seventh st., the past week. J. E. Bradley of Michigan City re-
